Tennessee 2018 Primary Election Results

Tennessee Chamber of Commerce & Industry's Morning after Report: 2018 Primary Election

On Thursday, August 2, 2018, Tennessee voters went to the polls to elect primary nominees for state and federal offices. For Tennessee's business community, 2018 is a significant election cycle that will usher in a new era of leadership in Tennessee to the Governor's office, the Tennessee General Assembly and a number of new congressional members. The Tennessee Chamber has been working to ensure this transition is smooth for business, meeting with candidates and talking to them about important business issues. It is crucially important that our new leaders work to maintain and enhance Tennessee's business climate with continued focus on workforce development and a strong business policy climate for economic growth. Let's look at the primary winners and begin to assess the general election matchups.

Governor – After a total of eight years in office, term limited Governor Bill Haslam's retirement spurred a vigorous multi-candidate primary race for both the Democratic and Republican nominations. Both primaries have been highly contested setting new records for campaign spending (over $51 million). Most attention has focused on high profile Republican candidates, who have spent the most and where the available polling data showed a tight race heading into Election Day. In the end political outsider Bill Lee decisively won the Republican nomination over former ECD Commissioner Randy Boyd, U.S. House member Diane Black and TN House Speaker Beth Harwell, respectively. In the Democratic primary former Nashville Mayor Karl Dean captured 75% of the vote and cruised to victory over State Representative Craig Fitzhugh. Now, both primary winners must quickly regroup as the general election is less than 100 days away.

U.S. Senate – As expected Congressman Marsha Blackburn (R-Brentwood) and former-Gov. Phil Bredesen (D-Nashville) won their parties respective nominations to replace retiring Senator Bob Corker (R-Chattanooga). Both candidates have a broad swath of supporters statewide, and potentially this race has national implications for control of the U.S. Senate. Current public polling shows the Senate race to be tight; several national outlets are rating it a "toss up". For the U.S. Senate race we expect a heated battle up until election day in November. We predict that by Labor Day voters will be unable to avoid these candidates as they make their case for the November general election.

U.S. Congress

Three of the nine Congressional seats were vacated this year, providing a number of open seat opportunities. Tim Burchett (TN-02), John Rose (TN-06) and Mark Green (TN-07) were victorious in the Republican primaries. Each of these Congressional seats are safe Republican with a voting index of R+20 or higher. Historical Note: In east TN Congressman Jimmy Duncan (TN-02, R-Knoxville) is retiring after 30 years in office. He was preceded in the office by his father, John Duncan, Sr. Many have noted next year will be the first year since 1964 that a Duncan has not represented the Knoxville area in Congress.

Tennessee Legislature: State Senate & State House

Please see chart below for unofficial primary results. The State Legislature has an historic number of retirements this year, generating at least 24 races in the House and 3 in the Senate to fill these seats. If you add in the members who were appointed to fill previous vacancies in the past year and are running now, there will be more than 30 new legislators sworn into office in January 2019. There are also several hotly contested primaries for both Democrat and Republican incumbents across the state. Republicans will retain control of both Chambers in the Legislature in 2019, but this has been one the most interesting primary election seasons in recent memory. Incumbents Rep. Barry Doss, Rep. Tim Wirgau and Senator Reginald Tate were defeated in their reelection efforts.

Background: Previous Election Year Outcomes

Similar to a number of Southern states, Tennessee state and federal election results have almost entirely trended Republican since 1994. Democrats are predicting better performance in 2018, touting an energized base, strong and unified campaign message and increased candidates fielded in a number of contests. Looking at recent primary turnout it is difficult to predict what impact this will have in Tennessee’s November election results. Below is a chart that shows political party performance in Tennessee.

Election	U.S. Senate	U.S. House	Governor	St. Senate	St. House
1994	2 R	5 R / 4 D	R	Dem control	Dem control
2002	2 R	4 R / 5 D	D	Dem control	Dem control
2006	2 R	4 R / 5 D	D	Rep control	Dem control
2010	2 R	7 R / 2 D	R	Rep control	Rep control
2018	1 R; open seat: tbd	likely 7 R / 2 D	open seat: tbd	maintain Rep control	maintain Rep control

Below we have made our best effort to capture all of the primary results from across the state. Please note that these are unofficial results compiled from the best sources available. Tennessee does not have run-offs in state and federal elections. Winners of each primary will face off in the general election in November.
